JOAN OF ARC

(By Archbishop Ireland)

Delivered May 3, 1899, in the cathedral at Orleans, France, during the celebration in honor of Joan of Arc, the Maid of Orleans, born at Domremy, January 13, 1412.

There are on the pages of humanity's story glories so sublime that all peoples see them; inspirations so potent that all peoples thrill from them. Such are the glories, Jeanne d'Arc, of thy deeds; such the inspirations of thy virtues. Thou hast been, first, a patriot, France; but thou hast belonged, also, to humanity; and wherever celebration is made in thy honor citizens of all countries may, without offense, be present and unite with the people of thy own land in offering to thee the tribute of reverence and of love.

From afar, Jeanne d'Arc, from distant America, I come to speak thy praises, to speak the praises of thy France, Jeanne d'Arc, I salute thee; France, I salute thee.

The question was put to Jeanne by the theologians of Poitiers: "Jeanne, you ask that soldiers be given you, and you say at the same time that it is God's pleasure to drive the English from the kingdom of France. If such is God's pleasure, you do not need soldiers, for alone God can defeat the English and make them return to their country." Jeanne answered: "In God's name soldiers will do the fighting and God will give the victory."

Jeanne's maxim was, "Let us work and God will work." When victory was to be gained, this was her constant cry: "I said to my soldiers, 'Go, France, into the ranks of the English; and I went myself.'"

Christians, be ours the maxim, the conduct of Jeanne. Work for country and for church, work energetically and perseveringly, work when others work with you, work when you are alone, work as God desires. Where there is no work, there is no life; where there is no life, there is death. As each one works or does nothing, country and church to a degree prosper or suffer.

Country and church: The one symbolizing the interests of earth; the other, the interests of heaven; country preparing the way for church, church blessing and ennobling country—both so beautiful and so sublime that the aspirations and of temper, reveal his designs. The country gathers into its entity all that is dearest and most valuable to men. Instincts compel love of country, religion commands and sanctifies it. After love of God is love of country, family and self yielding before it. Hence, it was St. Louis of France who marked the measure of human affections: "God, France and Margaret."

For my part, purified and strengthened in my affection of country by the example of Jeanne d'Arc, I go back from Orleans to America, more American than ever I have been, pledged, America, with all the intensity of my soul, to love and admire thee, my country—personification of liberty in authority and of authority in liberty—to battle for thy noble institutions, to labor until death, as citizen and as bishop, for thy welfare and thy honor. Jeanne d'Arc, for the good thou hast done my American heart, I thank thee.
